AMERICA'S NELSON.

A SKETCH OF FARRAGUT'S LIFE.

The Great Naval Hero of the Rebellion-A Middy in 1812-An Admiral Under the Union Flag in the Civil War-His Services to His Country.

No character in American history was united more fully than that of David Glascoe Farragut, a grand, honest, brave heart, with a simplicity and artlessness of manner which won the love of every true man. His history is an eventful one, and is closely inferwoven with that of this country will be mounted under command of Major Brock, at a period when civil war had embroiled the two sections. He was born at Campbell's Station, near Knoxville, Tenn., July 5, 1801, and died at Portsmouth, N. H., August 14, 1870. His father, George Farragut, was a native of Minorca, but coming to this country prior to the revolution served for seven years in the American army, attaining to the rank of major. Marrying in North Carolina, he emigrated to East Tennessee, where David was FARRAGUT AS A MIDDY.

At the age of eleven, through the influence of Commodore David Porter, who was a friend of his father, he received a warrant as midshipman, and The temperature yesterday was as follows: 7 a.m., was ordered to Commodore Porter's own ship, 55°; 11 a. m., 70°; 2 p. m., 79°; 3 p. m., 82°; 9 p. m., which was the famous Essex, and Farragut's first experience of naval life was that celebrated two years' cruise in the Pacific, which ended in the capture of the Essex. Of his personal share in the stirring events of that period there are but meagre details. After the capture on May 29, 1813, of the English whaler, the Atlantic, Farragut served on board of her as acting lieutenant, but was shortly after ordered back to the Essex, where he remained during the rest of that remarkable cruise, in which nearly every English whaler known to be in the South Atlantic was captured. The action with two English cruisers which resulted after a severe fight of two hours and a half in the CAPTURE OF THE ESSEX was a terrible initiation into the business of war for a boy of not thirteen years. Young Farragut went through the whole of it, and was wounded, although not severely. On the return of peace in 1814 Porter secured a place for his namesake in a school at Chester, Pa., where he spent a year in the study of military and naval science. He was then ordered to the Washington flagship of the Mediterranean squadron and there met the celebrated Mr. Charles Folsom, who was chaplain of the flagship. He was a man of varied and profound learning, and became Farragut's instructor. When Mr. Folsom was appointed consulat Tunis Farragut accompanied him, and this iniam K. He was ordered to Washington as inspector of ordnance in 1851, and in 1854 to the San Francisco yard. Here he remained, having been promoted to be captain, until 1858, when he was ordered to the Brocklyn and the home squadron. Later he was placed on the Naval Retiring Board, and stationed at New York.

THE CIVIL WAR broke out he was living at Norfolk, and made no secret of his abhorrence of the disloyal action of most of the people of that place. He was told by his neighbors that he would not be allowed to remain there if he gave utterance to his sentiments 'Very well," was the characteristic reply. "Then I will go where I can live and utter them." When the yard was destroyed Farragut left the city and returned to his duty in New York. On the 18th of April he left Norfolk without money and with his family, and reached New York with great difficulty. ### A NATIONAL SYNAGOGUE.

A Question Now Agitated—Some Remarks

About National Churches. The idea of having a national church at the Capital of the country has always been a favorite one with the various religious denominations throughout the country. The idea is by no means an inappropriate one, as here, more than anywhere else, a large number make their temporary home, and there should be some provision made for their enjoyment of the same religious privileges which they have at their own homes. Besides, there is another reason, which has more or less weight, and that is the pardonable pride which each denomination has to make A RESPECTABLE SHOWING in the character of the church edifice which represents them at the National Capital. This matter has been discussed in the various church organs with a very hearty or general response. The Methodists were the first denomination that succeeded in carrying this idea into practical effect by the erection of THE METROPOLITAN CHURCH. A sufficient amount was subscribed throughout the country to begin the erection of the church edifice. and reliance was placed upon the congregation that would be gathered in the new church to pay the balance. This expectation was not realized, and the debt remained upon the church edifice until quite recently, when a new effert was made, and the balance of the debt was wiped out by contributions from the Methodist churches throughout the country. While the members of this congregation have contributed generously to the payment of the debt, still the history of their church proves conclusively that the people for whom it was built could not be depended upon for pecuniary support. The next church edifice of this character erected here is the beautiful structure occupied by THE UNITARIAN SOCIETY. This was built by the contributions of similar socicties throughout the country, as well as the resident members, and it was paid for when dedicated. The society has continued in a prosperous condition, and in this instance the practicability pean languages, but also with Arabic and Turkish, The edifice occupied by the Congregational soclety was mainly built by contributions throughout cided personal courage, but of quiet tastes, rethe country, and, while it still labors under a large served manners and pure morals. "That is merely an old question revamped. Some seven or eight years ago I advocated the erection of a national synagogue here in the Jewish papers very vigorously, but the idea did not take. There was no interest manifested, and so the matter was dropped."

SUNDAY EVENTS.

President Garfield at the Congregational Church-A Sermon by Dr. Mitchell. There was a large congregation at the Congregational Church yesterday morning. The pulpit was occupied by the venerable Dr. Mark Hopkins, the president of Williams College. As a compliment to his instructor President Garfield, accompanied by Mrs. Garfield, his mother, and Mrs. Admiral Farragut attended service, instead of their own place of worship. They arrived at the church early and were shown to Secretary Windom's pew. Very few knew that the distinguished party were present until after the service. President Hopkins is a venerable man, of large frame, the war. A combined attack was crowned with a massive head covered with abundant white hair.
